

The Activities of some Fellows of De Vaux College, Salisbury, at Oxford and elsewhere.

By KATHLEEN EDWARDS

DE VAUX COLLEGE, or, as it was originally called, the House of the Valley of Scholars of St. Nicholas of Salisbury, has aroused the interest of antiquaries and historians of Oxford University since the time of Anthony Wood in the seventeenth century. It was founded in 1262<sup>1</sup> by Giles of Bridport, Bishop of Salisbury, in a meadow by the cathedral church of Salisbury for two chaplains and twenty poor, needy and teachable scholars, serving God and Blessed Nicholas, and living there, studying and making progress in theology and the liberal arts. Their warden was to be a canon of Salisbury cathedral, chosen by the dean and chapter, who were to be perpetual patrons of the house. At this time Salisbury was practically a university city. In 1238 there was an important migration of masters and students from Oxford, some of whom went to Salisbury,<sup>2</sup> which seems to have been a centre of studies since the days of Bishop Richard Poore in the early thirteenth century.<sup>3</sup> Rashdall has suggested that some of these students may have decided to remain in Salisbury after lectures were resumed in Oxford, and that the colony of 1238 may have been reinforced by the troubles of 1264, or by one of the many disturbances between North and South or Town and Gown which marked the years 1264-78 at Oxford.<sup>4</sup> In 1279 an agreement was drawn up between the chancellor and subdean of Salisbury cathedral, defining their respective jurisdiction over the scholars;<sup>5</sup> this suggests both that the chancellor's jurisdiction over the scholars of the cathedral schools had been extended over the newcomers, and that Salisbury now had three main characteristics of a university city: there were a number of masters teaching in different faculties, and the scholars were liable to be involved in civil and personal disputes which were more than the disputes of schoolboys. Probably, therefore, it was for students in this nascent university of Salisbury that Bishop Giles founded his college. His plans seem to have been influenced by arrangements in some of the colleges already existing at Paris,<sup>6</sup> but in several ways the constitution of De Vaux was also similar to that of the later medieval colleges of Oxford and Cambridge. Therefore it has often been claimed as the first university college in England, founded two years before Merton, the first Oxford college.<sup>7</sup>

Of the later history of De Vaux little is known apart from its dissolution in 1542, and there has been much speculation. Anthony Wood, writing in 1661-6, seems to have been the first to declare that, in the later middle ages, the Valley scholars resorted constantly to Oxford, where they stayed in two halls in Schools Street called Salysurry, Salesury or Salisbury Hall and Little St. Edmund Hall, and that they had the privilege, on the Chancellor of Salisbury's recommendation, of proceeding to Oxford degrees.<sup>8</sup> Leach, building on this, and on a statement of Canon Moberly<sup>9</sup> that in 1325 the cathedral chapter ordered all the scholars to leave Salisbury and go to Oxford, declared that, 'in 1325, the embryo university of Salisbury having practically come to an end, the majority of scholars went to Oxford, where they lived in Salisbury Hall at the cost of the endowment of the college at Salisbury; the scholars who remained in Salisbury apparently spent a period of probation there, attending the cathedral grammar school before going on to Oxford.'<sup>10</sup> Thus he claimed that while the early history of De Vaux reversed that of Merton (the fellows of Merton also having a double home at Maldon in Surrey and at Merton College in Oxford), its later history formed an almost exact precedent for the two St. Mary Colleges of William of Wykeham at Winchester and at New College, Oxford.<sup>11</sup> These conclusions seem to be based almost entirely on legends. The name Salysurry Hall has now been shown to be a corruption, not of Salisbury Hall, but of la Salle Desirée.<sup>12</sup> One probable fellow of De Vaux, John of Harnham, was principal of Little St. Edmund Hall in 1428,<sup>13</sup> but no other known principals or students of either hall seem to have been Valley Scholars. Again, no trace has been found at Oxford of the remarkable privilege of the chancellor of Salisbury cathedral of recommending Valley fellows to Oxford degrees without further examination: the licentia ubique docendi was one of the most highly valued privileges of the medieval university, and it seems most unlikely that Oxford would have allowed the chancellor of Salisbury to promote students for it. Finally, Canon Moberly was mistaken in attributing to 1325 the chapter act ordering the scholars to leave Salisbury and go to Oxford. There is no trace of such an entry in the chapter registers in 1325, while it is clearly entered in the act book under the year 1525/6.<sup>14</sup>

It thus seems that the later history of De Vaux and its relations with Oxford University need to be re-examined. The notes which follow are an attempt to throw light on these problems from an aspect which has not previously been investigated, that is, the careers of individual fellows of the college. About 114 names of fellows and chaplains have been traced from the 280 years of the college's existence, mainly in lists of witnesses to deeds in a fifteenth-century cartulary of the college,<sup>15</sup> in ordination lists of the bishops of Salisbury (which begin only in 1397), and in the act books of the dean and chapter of Salisbury. Four lived in the late thirteenth century, 38 in the fourteenth century, 48 in the fifteenth century, and 24 in the early sixteenth century. Many seem to have been rather obscure men, whose names rarely appear in the records of the royal chancery or exchequer, or in ecclesiastical records outside the diocese, but some biographical material has been collected for the careers, usually ecclesiastical and academic, of a fair proportion. The sources used have been chiefly the registers of the bishops and dean and chapter of Salisbury, printed registers of bishops of neighbouring dioceses, the printed Calendars of Papal Letters and Petitions relating to England, the Calendars of Close, Patent and Fine Rolls, the volumes of the Oxford Historical Society, and the unpublished registers of Congregation of Oxford University. In addition, I am deeply indebted to Mr. A. B. Emden, who has not only very kindly placed at my disposal information in his forthcoming Register of Oxford Scholars and Graduates before 1500, but has also given me most generous and helpful criticism and advice on many biographical problems. The evidence is obviously too incomplete to form a basis for a full history of the college. Such general conclusions as may be drawn from the ecclesiastical careers of the fellows, and their activities in accumulating land for their college will be discussed in my forthcoming article on De Vaux in the Victoria County History, Wiltshire. In the meantime, it may be of interest to point out a few ways in which their academic careers throw light on the particular problems of the fellows' studies and of the relations of their college with Oxford University in the later middle ages.

First, at least 64 of the 114 fellows and chaplains obtained university degrees. Of the remaining 50, enough is known of the careers of a few, such as William Glym, king's clerk, and Roger Fouk, resident fellow, to be fairly certain that they never took degrees. But some may have gone to a university for a short time without taking a degree, while others, who occur only once or twice in the records without the title Magister, may well have obtained degrees later in their careers. The faculties in which the magistri graduated are not generally known until the late fourteenth century, when they begin to be specified in the ordination lists. In the later middle ages about 19 or 20 are thought to have proceeded to higher degrees after graduating in arts. Only two of these, William Mortimer, D.D., in 1530, and William Kyngman, B.D., in 1534, were theologians.<sup>16</sup> Two more, John de Tichemersh and William of Bath, were probably doctors of medicine. The remaining 16, most of whom graduated in the fifteenth or early sixteenth centuries, were lawyers, 2 or 3 being bachelors of both civil and canon law, 2 bachelors of canon law only, 11 or 12 bachelors of civil law.<sup>17</sup> One of the most interesting results of these figures is to show the far greater proportion of lawyers, particularly civilians, to theologians in a college founded originally for artists and theologians. The same growing popularity of the more lucrative study of civil law over theology is found in Oxford colleges and halls at the same period; but the dean and chapter of Salisbury in the late fifteenth century were clearly uncomfortable about it at De Vaux. In 1473, when they admitted William Ashley to a fellowship, they specifically ordered that after he had studied grammar and dialectic and obtained a degree of M.A. if possible, he was to proceed to the study of theology and on no account to civil law.<sup>18</sup>

Clearly, after the thirteenth century, fellows who obtained degrees must have attended a university at a distance from Salisbury. The financial arrangements made by the college to meet these conditions are described in a papal dispensation to John Bate, B.Can.L., fellow of De Vaux in 1453, when they had probably long been in force. There were then apparently three groups of fellows: first those absent from Salisbury while studying at a university, who were given twenty gold florins a year to pay for their food and clothing; secondly those in residence at the college in Salisbury, who had six gold florins with their food; lastly those resident neither at the college nor at a university, who had six gold florins without food or clothing.<sup>19</sup> It is, however, difficult to discover the universities which the fellows attended. Some modification of the view that all the fellows went as a matter of course to Oxford is probably necessary now that it is known that there was no Salisbury Hall at Oxford to receive them, and that the dean and chapter did not order all the fellows to go there in 1325. One student of the early fifteenth century who was elected steward of the college against his will and so forced to remain in Salisbury for a year, stated in a letter to his patron that he had only recently returned from his studies ad partes cismarinas, and that his fellow scholars had elected him in spite, suspecting that he would soon want to be off again.<sup>20</sup> He thanked his patron in effusive language for the help which had enabled him to study in spite of the poverty of his fellowship. Probably he had been studying overseas, where his fellowship of twenty gold florins would certainly not have paid for the expenses of travel and maintenance. Normally, however, for fellows without benefices or rich patrons, Oxford would seem to have been the obvious choice, since the journey to it of only about forty miles was far less expensive than that to any other university. There was apparently no compulsion on them to choose Oxford, but the phrase normally used in the records of fellows studying at a distance from Salisbury is that they were Oxonie et alibi ubi viget studium generale. Thus eight scholars who appeared at a visitation of the college in 1454 said that their fellows living in the studium of the University of Oxford and elsewhere were unable to attend because the notice given had been too short;<sup>21</sup> and in 1526, when the dean and chapter ordered the scholars to leave Salisbury, they told them to go to Oxford or to any other university.<sup>22</sup> Two documents mention Oxford only. In 1400 Thomas de Boiton, bowyer and citizen of Salisbury, left a quarter of the residue of his estate to poor scholars of the college, Oxonie scolatizantibus;<sup>23</sup> while between 1538 and 1542 John Leland, visiting the college on the eve of the dissolution, wrote, 'Part of these scholars remaine yn the college at Saresbyrie . . . the residew study at Oxford.'<sup>24</sup> Moreover, Oxford is the only university in whose archives it has been possible to trace a few of the academic careers of the fellows. One probable fellow of De Vaux, Master John Harnham, B.C.L., has been claimed as a graduate of Cambridge, and may possibly have been so, though he was almost certainly at Oxford as well.<sup>25</sup>

has been the Registers of Congregation, in which are entered the graces which had to be granted before students could proceed to any degree. Unfortunately these registers are extant for only 51 years of De Vaux's history : from 1449-63 and from 1505 to the dissolution in 1542, and for these years they are probably incomplete. However, the names of 10 students who were certainly or probably Valley scholars from Salisbury have been traced in them, with 4 more who may possibly have been at De Vaux. None of these is described as a scholar of De Vaux or Salisbury in the registers. They supplicated for their graces in the normal way as Oxford scholars, asking for example that 3 or 4 years' study in the faculty of arts at Oxford, with attendance at ordinary lectures and one or two responsions pro forma, might suffice for their admission to lecture on a book of the faculty. Most have been found as students in the faculty of arts. Only two, Robert Cliffe, M.A. in 1455, and Thomas Galeys in 1458 and 1462, appear in the first register of 1449-63. Next, a group of 4, John Chapman, William Mortimer, Thomas Newman and Thomas Roche, supplicated for graces to determine as B.A.s in 1511/12, and three or possibly six more later between 1513 and 1544;<sup>26</sup> while 6 of these and 2 others proceeded to the degree of M.A. after a further 2 to 4 years' study.<sup>27</sup> Only one very doubtful fellow, a John Thompson in 1539, has been found in the list of admissions to B.C.L.; and two, William Kyngman and William Mortimer, who were almost certainly of De Vaux, in the graces for admission to B.D. and D.D. The long list of graces and dispensations to William Mortimer, the only probable fellow of De Vaux known to have proceeded as far as D.D., are of particular interest. From them his career at Oxford can be traced from 1511, when he was admitted B.A., until his election as Lady Margaret Reader in Divinity in 1530. From about 1522 onwards he was clearly not relying solely on a fellowship at De Vaux to support him in his studies, if indeed he had not already resigned it for more lucrative employment. From this time onwards a large number of graces allowed him to postpone particular academic exercises because he had to attend his master and fellow student, Richard Mawdley, archdeacon of Leicester, on business of his archdeaconry, or because of his duties as chaplain of the Bishop of Lincoln.

Other graduates among the Valley fellows have been traced in other records at Oxford, bringing the total up to about 20 who were probably there, with another 6 who were possibly there. The first two, William de Baa or Bath, who rented a solar in Schools Street in 1324, and John de Tichemersh,

M.A. and Dr. of Medicine of Lincoln diocese, who was included in a roll of Oxford University for papal graces in 1335, may push back the date at which scholars from De Vaux are known to have gone to Oxford to the first half of the fourteenth century. The rest of the evidence comes chiefly from the late fourteenth and from the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, when the records are fuller. During this period 6 or 7 probable fellows have been found living in 6 or 7 different Oxford halls, four of them as principals.<sup>28</sup> In 1419-20 De Vaux provided a senior proctor to the University in the person of Richard Hethe. There were also John Marchaunt, M.A., who rented a geometry classroom in 1453-4, and John Goolde, a fellow of De Vaux in 1465, who acted as arbitrator in a case before the Chancellor's Commissary at Oxford in 1469. By 1472 he was resident in Magdalen College, where he died and was buried after completing transcripts of Bruni's Latin translations of the Ethics and Politics of Aristotle. One and possibly two more Valley fellows were also fellows of Exeter College, Oxford. John de Sevenash, M.A., fellow of Exeter College in 1324, rector in 1325-6, and master of the grammar school in the city of Exeter in 1329, may possibly have retired to De Vaux, where a John de Sevenash appears between 1333 and 1345 as a senior fellow who was active as a co-feoffee in acquiring and leasing property for the college. John Fessard, who was probably a young fellow of De Vaux at the dissolution in 1542, since his pension was only 2 li. 13s. 4d. a year, obtained a fellowship of the Salisbury foundation at Exeter College in 1543-4 where he proceeded to take his B.A. degree in 1544 and his M.A., in 1554.

Thus fellows of De Vaux appear as members of Oxford University probably from the third or fourth decades of the fourteenth century, and evidence for their activities there becomes fuller as the surviving records increase in number in the last centuries of the middle ages. These activities and the relation of their college with the University were evidently less remarkable than is suggested in the pages of Anthony Wood. Nevertheless, the way in which De Vaux adapted itself to the changed academic conditions of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries is extremely interesting. By the first quarter of the fourteenth century it was clear that Salisbury was not to develop permanently into a university city, yet the college remained there in the position, apparently unique in medieval England, of a university college more than forty miles from the nearest university. The careers of some fellows show that modifications of the founder's plans were made. Not all the fellows studied, at any rate for the whole period during which they held their fellowships. A few fellowships were apparently used as prebends or corrodiess rather than as university scholarships, and some of the older fellows seem to have settled down to live at the college.<sup>29</sup> Yet the founder's intentions were never really abandoned. At all periods undergraduate fellows were admitted according to the foundation charter, and a fair proportion took university degrees, most of them probably at Oxford, though without special privileges. Though few seem to have been outstanding men, either academically or in the church, the later careers of many suggest that they were competent and did useful work in their own and neighbouring dioceses, usually as parish priests or ecclesiastical lawyers.<sup>29</sup> In this way the college fulfilled the main function of a medieval university college in helping to provide a more learned clergy for the church, particularly in its own diocese.

Two problems remain, which are possibly related: the apparent change of policy of the cathedral chapter in 1526, when, on the death of the warden, Thomas Martin, it was ordered that all the scholars should go to Oxford or some other university, and that none should remain in Salisbury except the two chaplains, two stewards, the cook and the butler, on pain of losing their commons<sup>30</sup>; and the dissolution of the college in 1542. The suddenness of the change of policy in 1526 must not be exaggerated. A number of fellows were already in Oxford, and the chapter may merely have wished to regulate and make uniform an existing practice. On the other hand, the decision may also have been in part an unsuccessful attempt to avert the dissolution, which some canons may have feared was approaching. There would seem to have been no very obvious reason for the dissolution, either in the wealth of the college, which was negligible, or, so far as surviving records tell us, in scandalous living. But the college was almost as much a chantry as an educational institution, and fears were being expressed even at Oxford that the ecclesiastical character of some colleges might lead to their downfall. Moreover, in the case of De Vaux, critics might be expected to urge that sixteenth-century Salisbury was not the best place for university masters and students to have their permanent home; and members of the chapter may well have agreed that all the fellows could study with more profit at a university. Yet the chapter, by allowing only the two chaplains and two stewards to remain at the college, may in fact have emphasized the chantry character of the foundation in Salisbury, and so have contributed to the dissolution.

LIST OF KNOWN MEMBERS OF DE VAUX COLLEGE

In the following list the names of fellows or scholars, chaplains, and stewards or proctors of De Vaux have been arranged in alphabetical order. Probably most of them were fellows. The terms 'fellow' and 'scholar' were used interchangeably in the records ; there is no evidence for scholars at the college who were not fellows. The two resident chaplains may sometimes have been chosen from the senior fellows, e.g. Thomas Bat, who appears as a scholar in 1380, and was one of the priests celebrating in the college chapel in 1381 ; and the proctor or steward (again the names were used interchangeably) was a fellow elected by his fellow-scholars to administer the property and collect the rents of the college. A few names of clerks who cannot definitely be claimed as fellows have been placed in square brackets, e.g. those who were ordained to the title of De Vaux without being described as fellows. They were quite possibly fellows, since others, e.g. John Parke, Richard Soper, ordained in the same way, have appeared later with the description ' fellow ' or ' scholar '.

window ; father of a bastard son, also called William Harding. M. William had sold property in Sar. to D. and C. Sar. for 100 marks, and by agreement had enfeoffed 5 co-feoffees with it to use of D. and C. He received 20 li. in part payment, but his son then declared that the D. and C., having possession, would not pay the rest. They afterwards paid ; but while M. William was still in fear and doubt, his son persuaded him to draw up a deed which would force the D. and C. to pay or to lose the land. 'Grucchyng in his conscience', he refused to seal the deed, but his son took away the unsealed deed from his chamber at Beaulieu without his knowledge. Declaration of M. William that if any deed in his writing be found which destroyed the feoffment to the co-feoffees, it was forged. At his special instance he sued to have this enrolled in chancery, 3 Feb. 1467 (C.C.R., 1461-8, p. 403 ; Ceremonies and Processions Sar., pp. 140-2) ; died by 10 Feb. 1470 (D. & C. Sar., Reg. William Harding, senior, bastard and scholar of De Vaux, appeared in person before cathedral chapter Sar. with letters of acquittance, acknowledging that the President and C. had given him 10 li. sterling in full payment of the 20 li. due for property bought from him ; he took oath to hand over to President and C. all evidences concerning the property with which Thomas Harding, his uncle, William Harding, his father, and he, William the Bastard, had been enfeoffed, 10 Feb. 1470 (ibid.) ; for his earlier action after the sale of the property by his father to the D. and C., see above, s.v. Harding, M. William.

J. and J. A. Venn, Alumni Cantabrigienses (C.U.P., 1922, I, II, s.v. Harnham), claim, without giving evidence, that this John was B.C.L. of Cambridge Univ. Mr. A. B. Emden has pointed out that if their claim is based on John's holding of an ecclesiastical office and benefice in co. Cambs. and dioc. Ely, it may be discounted, as Bp. Bouchier, by whom he was collated, was an Oxford man. There would, however, be nothing incompatible in John being a graduate of both Oxford and Cambridge and a fellow of De Vaux.

HASARD (HASARDE, HASORD), WILLIAM, of De Vaux College, ord. acol. 22 Dec. 1474 ; fellow of De Vaux, ord. subdeac. 5 Mar. 1474, deac. 9 Apr. 1474, priest 4 June 1474, to title of college (Reg. Beauchamp, Sar., I, Ord., ff. 204a, 209a-10b).

<sup>34</sup> The following entries have been grouped to suggest that there were two William Hungerfords, since it seems unlikely, though not impossible, that the steward of 1282 was the same man as the scholar of 1343/4. The clerk who acquired property for the college c. 1294-1324 has been identified with the scholar of 1343/4 because his name both as co-feoffee and scholar appears with that of William Codford.

He was himself described as scholar of De Vaux in deed of 6 Oct. 1340, and as r. of Fiskerton, Linc. dioc., 19 Aug. 1346, when he again granted the Minster St. tenement to 2 other scholars of De Vaux, who were to pay rent for it to warden of De Vaux (Add. <sup>39</sup> The entries in the MS. registers of the Univ. have been examined, but throw no light on which, if any, of these scholars was the fellow of De Vaux.

<sup>40</sup> Jones, Fasti Sar., pp. 403, 379, suggests that this John Thomson may be the same as the John Thomson who was presented to preb. Durnford in Sar. cathedral, 29 Mar. 1565, died 1571. The prebendary of Durnford is, however, identified by Venn, Alumni Cantab., I, iv, s.v. Thompson, with John Thompson, born at Pocklington, Yorks, who graduated at Cambridge as B.A., 1538-9, M.A., 1541, B.D., 1551, and who was fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge in 1540.

CORRODARIANS

MOTON (MOTOUN), ROGER, citizen Sar., and CHRISTINE OF LONDON, his wife, granted right by warden and scholars of receiving their food in De Vaux College for rest of their lives, and of having the same privileges of coming and going from the close as the scholars. Christine might have a chamber built for her at her husband's expense in the college grounds, and, after Roger's death, was to receive one mark a year. The scholars promised to celebrate the anniversary of their obit days for ever, 14 Apr. 1317 (Add. MS. 28870, ff. 157b-158b; Cart. St. Nicholas Hospital, Sar., ed. C. Wordsworth, p. 287); 3s. 8d. distributed annually at College on Roger's obit day, 1535 (Valor Eccl., II, 90). In return Roger and Christine gave to M. Gilbert Lovel, Canon Sar. (then warden of De Vaux) tenements and rent in Minster St. and Winchester St., Sar., 12 Oct. 1317 (Add. MS. 28870, f. 157); these were granted by M. Gilbert Lovel to warden and scholars of De Vaux, 20 Mar. 1325, after he had obtained lic. from King and Bp. Sar. to alienate them in mortmain, 7 Jan. 1323 and 9 July 1324 (ibid., ff. 158b-161; Reg. Mortival, Sar., II, 149a; C.P.R., 1324-7, p. 3).

WOOTTON, JOHN DE, DICTUS ATTE WERK OF DE OPERE, citizen Sar., granted to William de Hungefford, Henry le Rayner and William de Codford (q.v.) all his property in Britford, 1293-4; on 25 May 1304 he granted the same property to De Vaux College in return for having status of a fellow in the college for rest of his life; but the property continued to be held by Hungerford, Rayner and Codford until 1324-5, by which time licences to alienate it in mortmain to the college had been obtained from the King and lords of Britford (Add. MS. 28870, ff. 62-4, 66-8, 79-80, 84, 87-88; C.P.R., 1317-21, p. 491).
